

Intensive Interaction for People Who Speak

Many people who have autism may be speaking at various levels of sophistication, yet still have significant difficulties with social interaction - being with and conversing with other people, turn-taking, making eye-contact, and generally using and understanding non-verbal communication. Intensive Interaction helps people to engage in and make progress with social communication, emotional well-being and to develop the 'Fundamentals of Communication'.

Venue: Holiday Inn Birmingham - Bromsgrove
Kidderminster Road
Bromsgrove, Worcestershire
B61 9AB

Date: Friday 1 March 2019

Duration: One day 9.30am - 3.30pm
Please arrive at 9.00 am for registration

Lunch & Refreshments are included. Extensive handout booklet provided

Course content includes:

- The nature of social communication and its impact on psychological and emotional well-being.
- The Fundamentals of Communication – why Intensive Interaction is so important.
- Principles of Intensive Interaction and how to use them with people who can speak, yet need more experience with social contact, turn-taking, eye contacts, facial expressions and non-verbal communication.
- Videos showing children and adults with autism making progress developing social and emotional connections, enjoying interactions, learning to communicate using vocalisations, facial expressions and gesture, becoming relaxed, making eye contact (and much more!).
- Integrating Intensive Interaction principles into a day where the person already has many clever performances and interests.
- Developing true conversational turn-taking, and further use of speech and chit-chat.
- Recognising outcomes and how to record-keep.

Previously I felt that there was an invisible barrier, an emotional 'gap' between us. Intensive Interaction has begun to change that. Now we have started to build this foundation I feel so much more positive about his future.

Parent of a 7 yr old with Autism

I feel Intensive Interaction has been a major contributing factor in my son's progress. His transformation in the last 6 months has been staggering.
